Adventures from LOMIK Camps & Retreat Centers

Becoming

Taylor came to camp because a neighbor invited her and a few other girls from their cul-de-sac.

Taylor arrived with very little exposure to scripture or church life. What she knew about God came mostly from her neighbor who invited her to camp. Camp was unfamiliar for her, and faith was something she had never truly explored for herself.

Through her counselor's example and belonging in the camp community, Taylor encountered a faith that wasn't forced—but lived.

Becoming continued...

She was invited to ask questions, belong, and explore belief in a safe, welcoming space.

After camp ended, Taylor began going to church on her own. Not because anyone made her. Because she wanted more. Faith became personal. Faith became hers.

Years later, Taylor returned as a member of the summer staff. She quickly became a leader, known for her initiative, kindness, and maturity. As a counselor, Taylor brought deep intentionality to everything she did. She made sure campers left with reminders they were loved and she led activities with care, patience, and joy.

Even when caring for difficult campers, Taylor responded with grace. She stayed kind, communicated well, and never lost sight of what mattered most: helping each camper experience Christ's love.

Because of your connection, first-time campers and those who didn't grow up in church, encounter the love of God. Camp is a place where faith takes root, leaders are formed, and lives are changed.
